THIS COP IS NOT ONLY A FRIEND, BUT FAMILY FOR THIS WOMAN

SAHAYA NOVINSTON LOBO
@ Chennai

WE often hear the phrase 'Kavayithurai Ungal Nambu' (police is your friend), but for a 27-year-old pregnant woman who was abandoned by her family, Inspector Rajeshwari is not just a friend, but family.

About a month ago the woman's parents, husband and brothers abandoned her. An autorickshaw driver who knew about Inspector Rajeshwari's social service work took the woman to the police station for safety. Now she gave birth to a boy and the inspector has helped her start a new life.

The woman who fell in love got married about a year ago. While her parents were against the marriage, the man abandoned her when she became pregnant.

Her husband dropped her off near Manali, a few km away from her parents' house. When she knocked on the doors, her brothers picked up a quarrel saying how she could she leave her husband especially when she is pregnant," said Inspector Rajeshwari from T Nagar AWP's police station.

Her plight fell on deaf ears and she was left to fend for herself. With no money or shelter, the woman was roaming the street when an autorickshaw driver saw her and informed Inspector Rajeshwari.

"I told her I'll take care of her needs and she can stay in a home," said Rajeshwari. The woman was lodged in Surabi home for destitute women in Kelly's. About a month ago, she gave birth to a boy at the Kilpauk Medical College and Hospital. "The woman gave me the honour of naming her child. On Wednesday, an event was organised where residents of the home and others participated," said the inspector.

How corpn shelters have taken in homeless, abandoned in lockdown

Harshitha Kumayan
@timesgroup.com

Chennai: Homeless and pregnant, Muthalakshmi J was stranded at Chennai Central railway station when she was rescued by Greater Chennai Corporation volunteers a few months ago.

"If I had not met them, I would have gone into labour on the railway platform," says the 25-year-old, who gave birth to her daughter just five hours after being rescued.

Seven months into her stay at the corporation's Surabi shelter for women with children in Kellys, Muthalakshmi and her daughter have made friends. "I can now start looking for jobs in peace, knowing that Kousalya patti and others will be there to take care of my little one," she says.

Several people, who were rendered homeless during the Covid-19 lockdown, have been rescued and housed at government shelters and homes across the city. Some of them now cherish new bonds at the homes that enable them to regain financial and emotional stability.

More than 6,000 homeless people have been rescued across Chennai since the lockdown began. The shelter inhabitants have been engaging with each other through skill development and recreational activities such as watching TV, gardening, art making, candle and incense sticks.

"We try to reconnect them with their families. We also provide counselling and conduct follow-up checks for over two months to ensure their safety," says an official in charge of the 53 city shelters for the urban homeless.

According to Sujith T, coordinator at the Chennai Corporation Rajiv Gandhi Hospital Men's Shelter, the transformation of most of the shelter inhabitants is visible - from fear to comfort.

"When I visit them, a few weeks after the rescue, they introduce me to their new friends and we have a good chat. These moments help me cope with my tough situations during the pandemic," he says.

For Ashwin Mantha, an entrepreneur from Pune, his new temporary residence - OCC Shelter for Urban Homeless Men, Sowcarpet, has been a safe space to engage in conversations.

"My business is shut down in Pune and I do not have money to get back home," says Mantha. Being a polyglot, the 49-year-old found it easy to bond with others at the shelter. "Though I have not made any deep friendships, I have some with whom I can speak and share my stories with," he says, adding that his acquaintances helped in reducing his stress and balancing his emotions in these tough times.

Women in shelters to make sanitary napkins for homeless, students

Chennai: "I know the struggles women face during menstruation so I was the first to volunteer for this project," said 18-year-old Sandhya, who was found abandoned at a city railway station a few months ago. The teenager along with 30 others at Surabi shelter for women is now making sanitary napkins that will be distributed for free to young girls and homeless women in the city.

official said, "It should start by next month. And the exercise will be carried out every month for at least a year, and we will slowly rope in more schools."

The napkins will also be simultaneously delivered to homeless women and those living in other corporation-run shelters. Padma Ram, a homeless daily wage earner from Chepauk, said she buys sanitary napkins when she can or uses cloths. "There is no place to let the cloth dry so I save up to buy a pad. Every time I buy napkins, the women around me ask for one saying they don't have enough money. We already struggle to access toilets, it becomes more difficult during this time," she said.

A HELPING HAND: The women at Surabi shelter have made 3,000 napkins so far

Initially, the napkins will be provided to two corporation-run schools around Kilpauk. "We will distribute it to students of Classes VI to XII. We will also door-deliver napkins to those who cannot attend classes," said a senior official from the corporation's health department. While the exact date of commencement of this project is still undecided, the

An NGO provided a vending machine to the shelter a few weeks ago and the women relieved ample raw material. They have since been working tirelessly to meet a daily target of 200 napkins. So far, they have made about 3,000. "We will also tie-up with other NGOs to reach out to more women and girl students in the city," the official said.

However, activists said the move was just the civic body compensating for not setting up or repairing sanitary napkin vending machines in schools.
